Another Huge Bitcoin Heist? CNET: "The infamous Bitcoin theft was quickly followed by a string of other volatile, high-profile bitcoin heists. If the recent incidents are any indication, the cryptocurrency could soon be well on its way to turning into the latest mainstream money." A New Era for a Virtual Currency Early Bitcoin enthusiast Trace Mayer: "What we're seeing right now is a new phase of Bitcoin, where it's no longer a curiosity that's confined to tech blogs and bit-geeks, or a technology, but a currency. It's gaining credibility, and government heads are waking up to the fact that Bitcoin is here to stay." Gavin Newsom: "A lot of people are looking at it as a potentially significant currency." More Than a Half a Million Dollars Missing The owner of Mt Gox, a Tokyo-based company, has since been missing. Its website was offline and the company's bankruptcy filing says it is under an investigation by the Tokyo metropolitan police. The site says: "For the safety of our clients and partners, we are closely cooperating with the Tokyo metropolitan police department. We will do everything we can do to help the police with their investigation." The Reversal of a 50% Drop Mt Gox's books show that the value of Bitcoins is about $14.9 million. On Feb. 27, the price of one bitcoin was $609.62, according to the coindesk.com price tracker. On Feb. 14, one bitcoin was $1,125. On Tuesday morning, the price was trading at $559. The value of Bitcoin has fallen from about $1,200 to $609 in about six days, before it traded down to $609 Tuesday morning, a reversal of a 50% drop. The fallen value of Bitcoin comes as the currency is growing in popularity. Bitcoin has spread across more than 20 countries, according to BitcoinCharts.com, e24f408de9
